TRAINER'S MANUAL

“Civic Education for Disadvantaged Learners”

The aim of the Manual is to provide systematic guidance to adult education providers in order to enable them to offer specialist training package on ‘Civic Education’. It will equip training facilitators with all the necessary knowledge about the content of the training, as well as about ways of organising the sessions. It offers an inclusive outline of the main theoretical and practical information, skills and processes relevant to offering this training package.

The Trainers’ Manual includes six modules that are grouped in different sessions and each session consists of several topics. Each module begins with ‘learning objectives’ and it includes theoretical and practical information that the trainer should use for teaching the particular topics as well as suggestions for exercises and relevant literature. Each session addresses a separate area that is of relevance to the overall training and it should be considered within the overall context of this specific training package. It could also benefit individuals who may wish to enrich their understanding of that particular topic as an independent learning activity and not as part of the total training package.

It is advised that the training course is made as interactive and participatory as possible. To enhance learning results, trainers should use different techniques to encourage participants’ active participation, including asking them to share personal experiences, posing additional questions and presenting them with dilemmas. Materials such as case studies and group work have been included in the sessions to foster positive learning outcomes. Of course, it is important that trainers use their judgement and take into account cultural norms and practices or levels of seniority for each group of participants before applying participatory approaches.
